Kids should go far. Not hungry.

Hunger should never stand in the way of our children's dreams for their future. President's Choice Children's Charity is on a mission to feed one million kids annually and teach them how to grow and cook.

A message from our Chairperson and Executive Director

Hunger hurts our kids, and we're just starting to understand the far-reaching impact of that reality. The effect of diet on health outcomes is well known, but recent research has established a connection between food insecurity and worsening mental health.

The number of children who live in Canada and are at risk for chronic hunger is shocking: 1 in every 5 children lives in a household experiencing food insecurity. When we share that information it's often met with disbelief, "how can there be hungry children here in Canada?" It's a devastating truth; there are chronically hungry kids in a country as prosperous as Canada.

Thanks to the support of millions of Canadians, President's Choice Children's Charity can be there for our kids. Our Power Full Kids programs provide participants with daily food and the tools to help them develop their growing and cooking skills, nourishing little tummies and big futures.

We are incredibly grateful to our founding partner, Loblaw Companies Ltd, and their colleagues who are avid fundraisers, their vendors who support our events and their customers across the country who donate. Their willingness to make a difference in the lives of children is essential to achieving our goals and ensuring that kids go far, not hungry.

843,000 well-fed kids and counting!

Good food helps young minds grow. Giving kids the energy they need. To learn. To contribute. To live their best lives.

Food is powerful.

That's why we're putting the power of food into the hands of children across Canada.

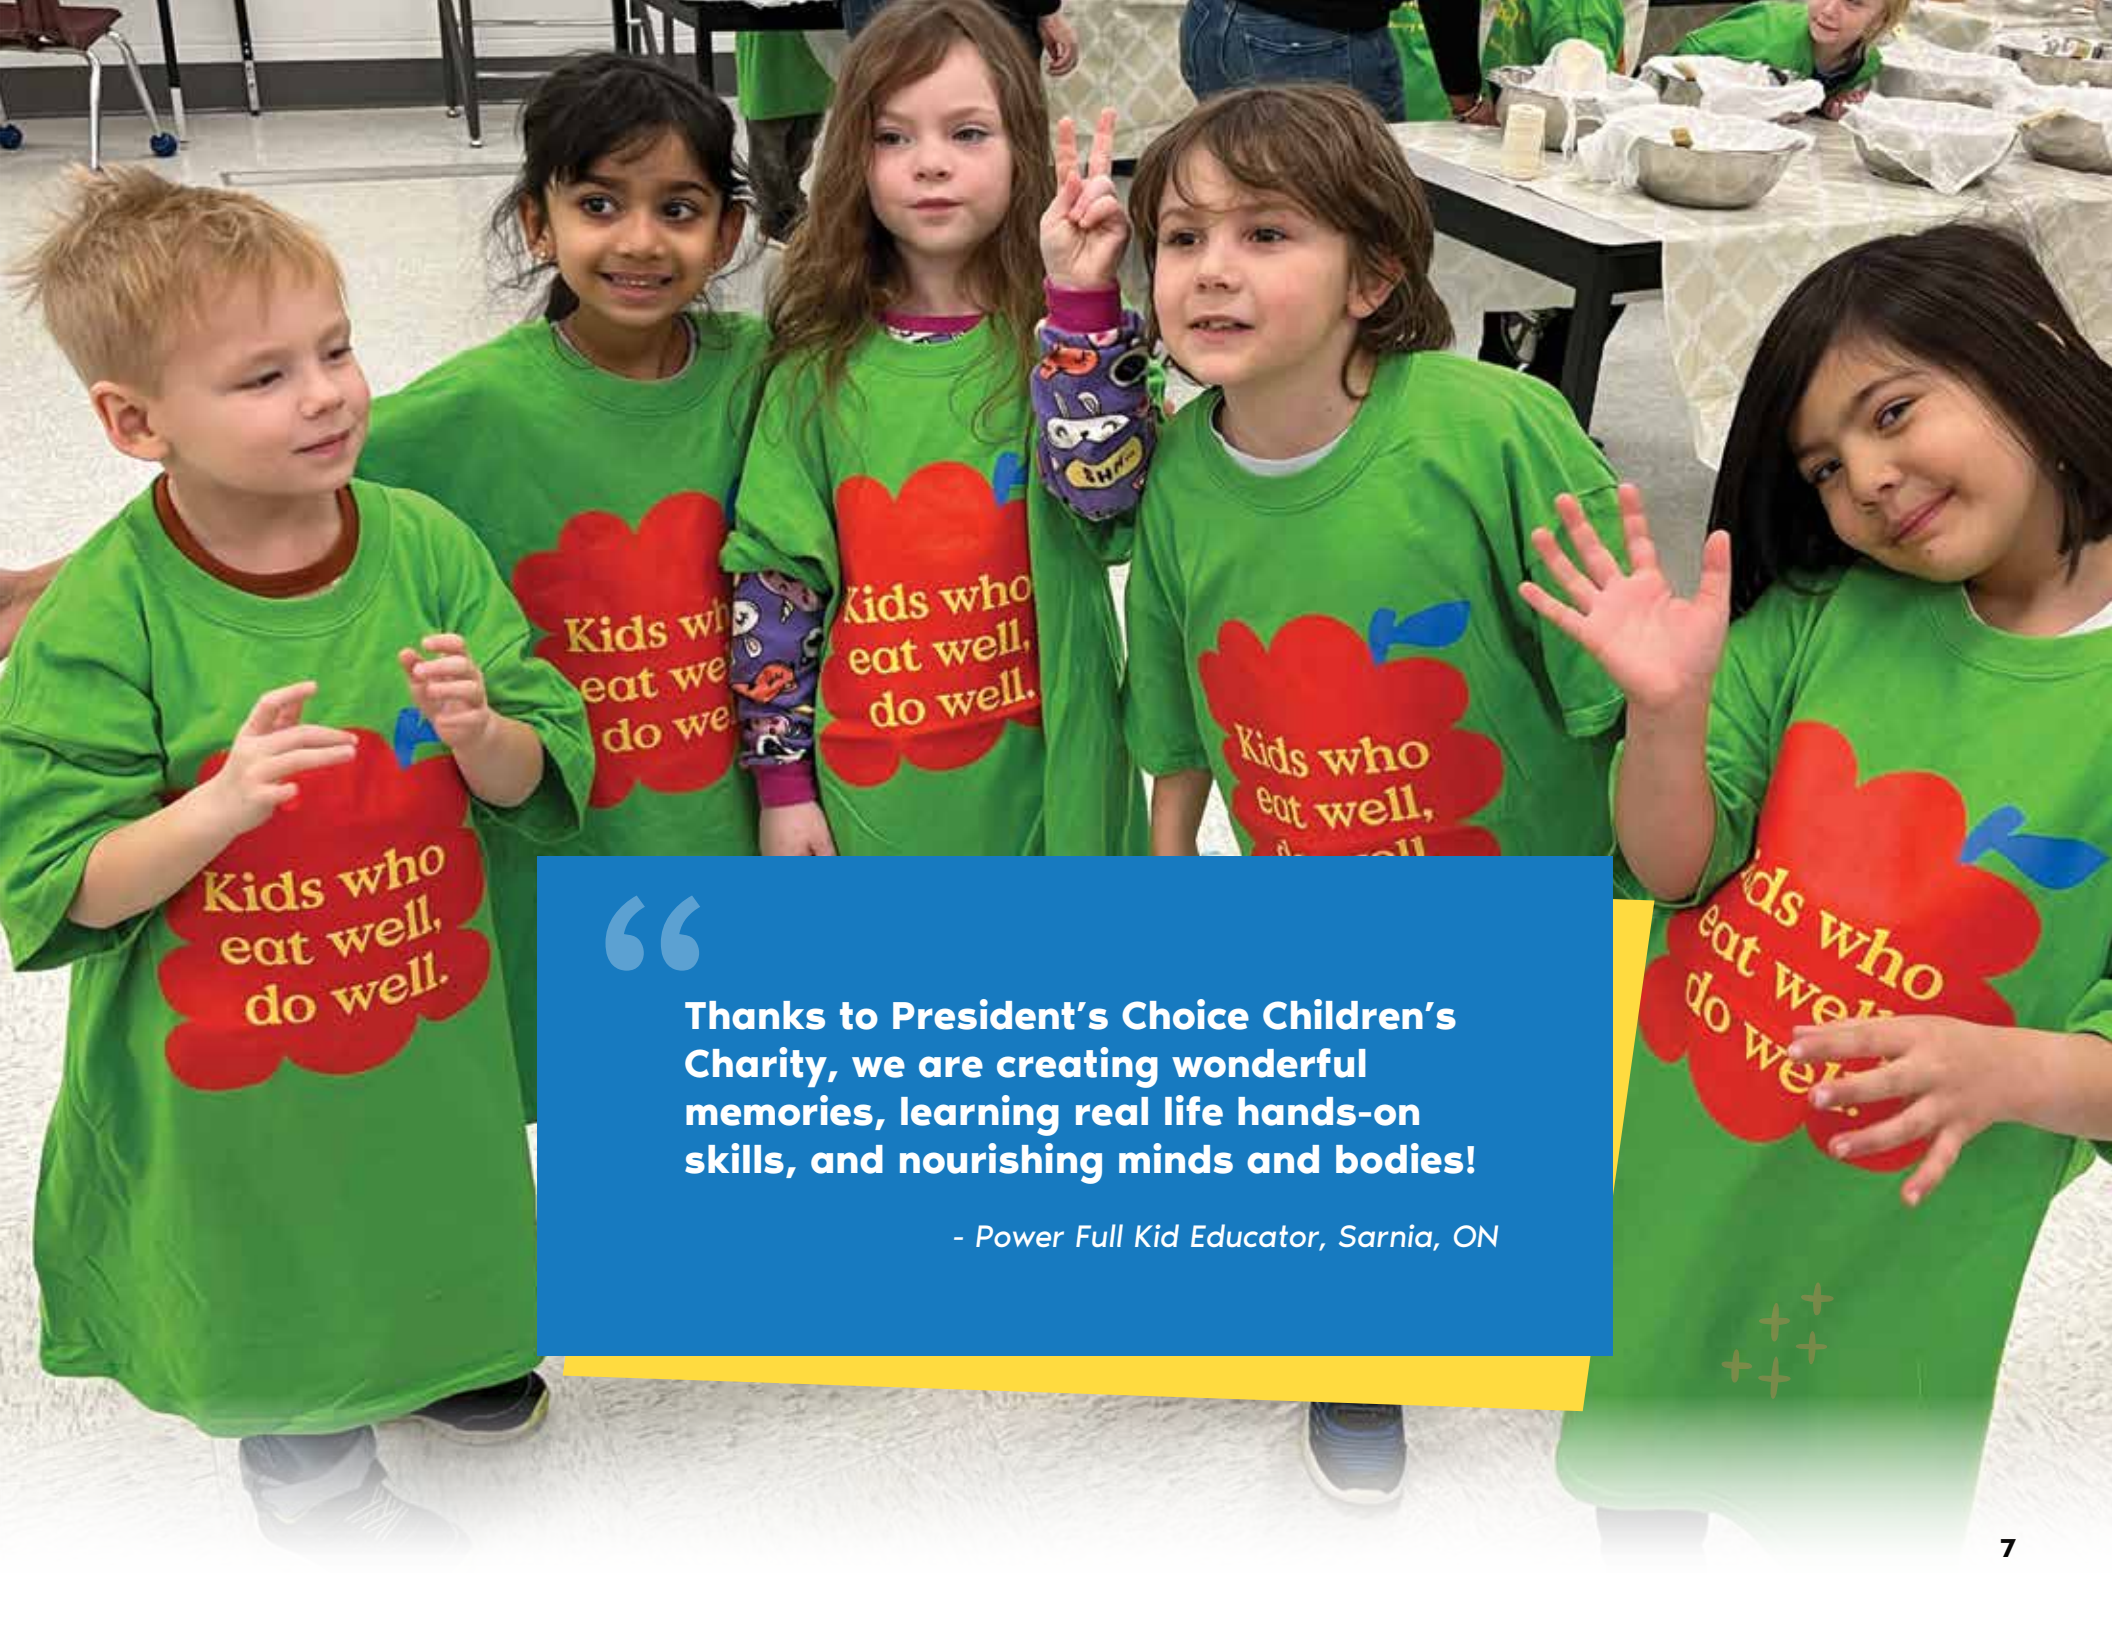

Because many are going hungry. Because many don't understand the importance of nutrition.

We're here to provide food and food knowledge. Across schools. Across the country.

Helping kids make healthier choices today and in their future.

Kids who eat well, do well.

Thanks to President's Choice Children's Charity, we are creating wonderful memories, learning real life hands-on skills, and nourishing minds and bodies!

Ben's mission to help feed kids

About 15 years ago, Ben Gillcrist was out for a night on the town in Saint John, NB, with some friends when they went into a pizza parlour in the wee hours of the morning. Behind the counter was a student from the elementary school Ben taught at. He was shocked.

"It's a kindergarten to Grade 8 school," he says. "This student really shouldn't have been there, but she was trying to make money for her family."

The experience made Ben realize he wanted to do more than teach kids – he wanted to help make things better in their lives. "It really affected me to see how dire things were in the neighbourhood," he says. "I realized there was work to be done here."

Today, Ben is the Community Schools Coordinator at the same school – St. John the Baptist/King Edward School in Saint John's lower south end. Part of his role is distributing breakfast through the school's Power Full Kids | Eat Well nutrition program, provided by President's Choice Children's Charity.

Every day, students have a healthy meal to start their day, including fresh fruit, bagels, and English muffins. After eight years in his current role, Ben has seen the impacts of the program on the children.

"We don't always know if they've eaten the night before," he says. "This program allows us to build confidence and trust. Kids are confident that they'll be fed when they come to school. They can depend on that when they can't depend on very much in their lives."

Ben recalls one boy who spent a rough night at home, with visits from the police and social workers due to a domestic incident involving his family. He felt like his world was falling apart, so Ben sat with him and had some breakfast. Ben stayed with him as he ate, quietly, just the two of them.

"Even though we didn't talk about his experience, I felt like it was important to stay with him in that moment and make space for him to just be at school." Ben says, "That meal helped him get through a tough day."

This is a common occurrence in a neighbourhood where, according to a 2021 report, six in 10 children are living in poverty. The Power Full Kids program removes one worry from students' minds – where their next meal is coming from.

"Our goal is to help these kids – many of whom are dealing with all kinds of trauma – to grow up and be okay," Ben says. "The support from President's Choice Children's Charity is a huge help in that it makes kids feel like they're safe and cared for at school. It's an intervention. And it helps us begin to address the trauma that they've experienced."

"We don't always know if they've eaten the night before. This program allows us to build confidence and trust. Kids are confident that they'll be fed when they come to school. They can depend on that when they can't depend on very much in their lives."

Hunger stands in the way

Hunger can make it difficult for a child to concentrate, negatively effects their attendance, and worsens learning outcomes. President's Choice Children's Charity is removing hunger as a barrier to education for Canadian children.

Did you know?

- Food insecurity is more prevalent among households with children.
- Well-fed kids perform better at school.
- 27% higher levels of anxiety are experienced by hungry children.
- 44.2% of students eat more fruits and vegetables when schools have gardens.
- 50 hours of nutrition education are needed to affect behavior change.

Our Impact

We believe we have a vital role to play in the fight against childhood hunger, providing good food to many of the more than one million Canadian children who live with food insecurity.

Imagine being eight years old and worrying about where your next meal is coming from, or providing for your baby sister and brother with special needs.

- Jay Poitras, Teacher

An eight-year-old's experience with hunger

Hungry kids experience more anxiety, miss more school, and disrupt their class more often. A child should ever have to carry the burden caused by hunger.

The following is a first-hand account from Jay Poitras, an educator whose school participates in the charity's Power Full Kids program.

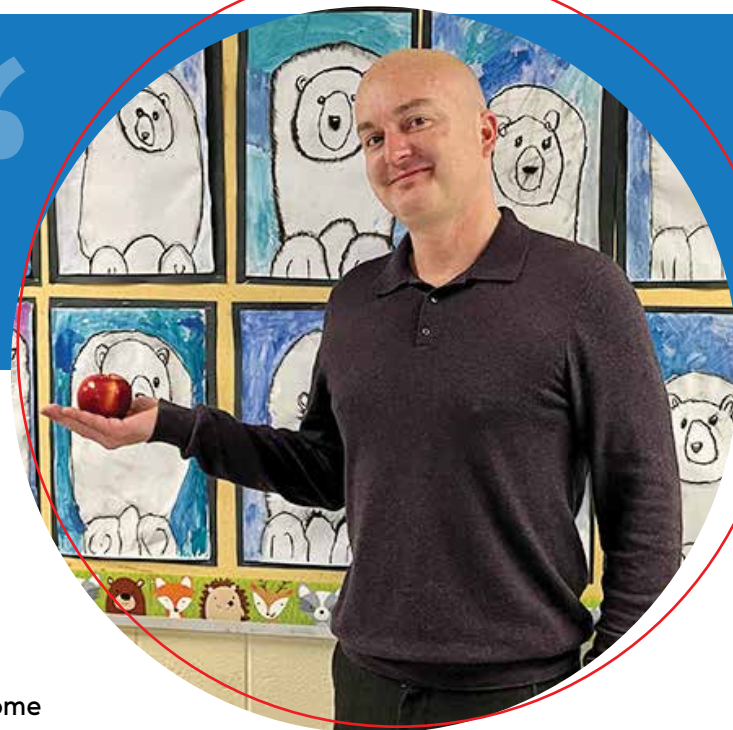

"One morning, one of my grade 3 students came over as I supervised the kids filling their plates with breakfast. Thomas*, a quiet kid, small for his age but very strong-willed, asked me what foods a baby could eat. I thought it was a curious question, but we went through the foods that would be ok for a baby to have.

"Then one day I noticed Thomas trying to pour a fruit smoothie into a small zip lock bag. I wondered if he was taking it home for later and didn't want it to spill in his backpack, so I asked him if he wanted some help. The help he needed went beyond a better way to carry a fruit smoothie. As a teacher you don't always know what your students are dealing with, but I didn't expect that eight-year-old Thomas was making sure his six-month-old sister had food each day.

"Thomas didn't want his friends to see, so I started to help him discreetly. Once he knew he was in a supportive space, he began to ask for vegetables for his autistic brother who liked the sensation of chewing crispy, crunchy foods. Together we would put food in the fridge that he could take home at the end of the day for his brother and sister.

"Both of Thomas' parents work full-time – his mother holding multiple jobs trying to make ends meet. But unfortunately, this story is a lot like other families who battle with food insecurity – it's a reminder that our communities should look out for each another.

"Thomas' situation broke my heart. Imagine being eight years old and worrying about where your next meal is coming from, or providing for your baby sister and brother with special needs.

"President's Choice Children's Charity's Power Full Kids program is the reason why I can help Thomas, and all of my students start their day with a full tummy. The program offers children security – knowing that they will get nutritious food at school every day relieves a huge burden from their little minds."

Growing the future of land-based education

An eight-hour drive from Saskatoon, at the end of the lone road leading into the community, sits the First Nation's village of Sandy Bay, Saskatchewan. At the centre is Hector Thiboutot Community School, a hub of the community and home to Presidents Choice Children's Charity's first Power Full Kids | Future Growers program location.

The residents of Sandy Bay have experienced decades of flooding brought about by resource projects that have damaged the land and destroyed homes. With the lack of healthy soil and the nearest grocery store two and a half hours away, the hydroponic container farm included with the Future Growers program has been a welcome addition to the Sandy Bay school community.

"The container farm allows us to have control over our environment, which is very important," says Svitlana Tulchynska, Science Teacher and Future Growers program lead. "For many students it's the only experience they will get growing things because the northern climate, and soil is not good for growing things outside."

The Future Growers program uses technology to complement land-based food systems in communities where Indigenous food sovereignty is challenged – empowering students to use innovative growing techniques to nourish themselves and their community.

Nathan Ray, the principal at Hector Thiboutot Community School, sat in the same science program 25 years ago and believes the Future Growers program is vital to the development of students and their community.

"The program totally aligns with our way of life here in the north. Before we had grocery stores, the land was our grocery store." Nathan explains, "Times are changing – technology is changing, and we have to change along with it. The opportunity for students to work in the farm – it's like they're harvesting from the land, but with technology."

Not only does the farm provide a consistent food source, but it also brings science to life in ways students wouldn't normally have the opportunity to experience. "Our students don't see a lot of technology or how they can

For many [students] it's the only experience they will get growing things because the northern climate and soil is not good for growing things outside.

- Svitlana Tulchynska, Science Teacher,
Hector Thiboutot Community School

use it in their daily life. [The farm] makes science more relevant to their everyday lives,” Svitlana explains. “When they go fishing or hunting and they learn those life skills... we’re also learning how to grow the food using technology in our class.”

Svitlana’s students are excited to discover and try new foods – making the connection between pizza and the smell of basil, an herb most have not ever seen. In a community where students have few conveniences, the ability to share food they’ve grown with their elders, family and friends has brought a newfound confidence.

“My mom gets excited when I bring home spinach because its so hard to get here” says Kenyon, student, and master grower. “We make salads and use it on burgers. It makes me happy to help my family and see them happy.”
